

Clarity-Can we notice different living condition of family from food?

Does higher cost of grocery always means more nutritious food ? they are also projecting attractive background pictures for expensive meals...why do you think is that so ?.....Gurpreet Singh

Source:
<https://www.theguardian.com/lifeandstyle/gallery/2013/may/06/hungry-planet-what-world-eats>

How does food impact your life ? How important it is to experiment with food from different places also what emotional response in relation to food? (Deepanjali)

It raises a question on the relation between cost, quantity, quality, and culture.. Packed food v/s raw Rajman

Compare and contrast the health outcomes for each family regarding food intake. Does abundance always equate to good health and does less equate to ill health? Based on this information, what needs to change? Anaela two or these pictures that you feel are closest to opposite of each other. Imagine what it would be like if these two families' food supplies were swapped for a week. Try to delve into the perspectives of each family through their attitudes towards

Please post your name and: 1. A question/idea about this resource, and 2. Some possible "lens(es)" for this question. (example: language learning, ecojustice, nutrition...)

Gurreet - Have students discuss the difference between needs and wants. What do we actually need to survive? What are your wants?

How does these pictures resonate with personal experience? (It can also be related to a developed country and developing country) Zhiqiang Liang what is communicated through the visual? Next, what is the "cost" to the planet comparing each table? What is the ecological footprint for each table and what does this suggest about lifestyle and

Can the types of food from different families indicate their cultural backgrounds? (Melody)

Who makes up a family? Which table is the healthiest (using Canada's Food Guide)? Which table has the most packaging? Which families look happiest? Clint

How important it is to note that the quality and quantity of food is varying from each country ? What does it tell about the economic status and history of the people ?Deepanjali

Do some families get more food, for less money? Choose one location to explore. How much money do people make on average? What is the minimum wage? Can most people afford to pay for their groceries? What do the findings suggest

What does food tell us about culture and diversity? It also makes me think of exploring bread around the world with students. Angelina

Have you noticed the differences among these pictures, for example, quality and quantity of food, the decoration of dining room or their facial expressions and explain your opinion - Cloe

